

Section 255 of the Telecommunications act must not be repealed because the regulations have not yet achieved the desired result of enabling persons with disabilities to effectively utilize modern telecommunications equipment. The FCC must also make certain that basic services such as wireless phones are classified as such under these rules.